

USE OF SILOS BY RANCHMEN

Because so many impracticable things for the promotion of stock raising and agriculture have been advocated by visionary men and fake schemes worked by grafters upon stockmen and farmers, they naturally look with suspicion upon innovations—plans for the improvement of methods that they have not seen tried out. Still it is a fact that progress comes thru experimentation. Some experiments are failures, of course, but others have led to improved methods without which no man can hope to succeed in this day and age of the world's progress.

The writer well remembers when the claims that were made regarding the productivity of alfalfa and its value as feed for stock were scouted by Nebraska farmers; but the farmer who would now deny alfalfa would be only exposing himself to the ridicule of his well informed neighbors. Within about a score of years the growing of alfalfa has increased until now it is one of Nebraska's leading crops and this state is second only to Kansas in the amount grown.

When The Herald began some years ago advocating the use of the silos by dairymen, there was not one so far as we know, within a hundred and fifty miles of Alliance, but now they are beginning to dot the prairie of western Nebraska, and their value to the dairy business of this part of the state, as well as to the farmers of eastern Nebraska, is generally conceded. We are now going a step further and are advocating the use of the silo by the beef cattle men of this section. There are those who say that it is a good thing for the dairyman but not practicable for the ranchman. We believe, however, that the time is near when the silo will come into general use by ranchmen, even in the sandhills country. With top-notch prices for beef, such as the ranchmen have been getting within the last few years, they want to make their holdings produce the most beef possible; and the limit of production will never be reached without the silo.

As to what kind of silo to put in, The Herald advises its readers to investigate the various kinds that are on the market and make his selection as his judgment shall dictate. The use of any practicable silo will be profitable. If you will write to, or call on, the manufacturers and dealers who advertise in this paper, they will give you a large amount of information that will be helpful in making your selection. They will also furnish you bulletins, if you desire, on the value of silage, which we cannot take the space to print in this paper. Persons residing in Nebraska may obtain free bulletins on silos and silage by writing to the Department of Agriculture, State University, Lincoln.
